

REAL people discovering a REAL relationship with the REAL Christ

December 22, 2008

To Whom It May Concern,

If you are considering bringing in Glen Aubrey to help your organization work together as a team, you should do it. You will not regret that decision. I confided in a pastor friend, namely Jim Garlow of Skyline Church, with some issues in our church and solicited his recommendation. It was simple and clear: you should talk with Glen Aubrey. I did just that.

As a Pastor of Worship Arts Programming I work with teams of people to plan and implement worship services and special events. At Visalia Church of the Nazarene there are over 100 volunteers who sing, act, play in the orchestra or rhythm band and provide all the technical support that is necessary to present the gospel of Jesus Christ in a new and creative way week in and week out. Within these teams of people there were talented, dependable souls whom I knew had a dream to use their gifts for God but I lacked the tools and knowledge to really bring them together so that the full force of their giftedness could be realized in a creative community.

Glen Aubrey came to us and helped us all come together by providing us proven principles and practices that will ensure ministry productivity for many years to come. Could I have just read his book and shared those principles with my people and had the same results? Absolutely not! Glen brings years of experience and knowledge as well as a calling from God to help churches increase their ministry potential when he walks through your door. His insight into the working of church ministry is invaluable and man does he know how to ask the right questions. The training transformed the worship arts programming ministry.

Before the Core Team training with Glen Aubrey I felt more like a managing director but now I feel like a visionary leader. Before the training I felt I had to come up with all the ideas and be the creator and then try and find people who could make it all happen. Now I am the leader of a team of incredibly creative people who look forward to meeting and know that their ideas are valued and gladly share in the responsibility of seeing ideas become reality. And to top it all off, we all actually enjoy each other because we have learned how to make one another succeed! Thank you Glen!
